BRITISH CAPITAL HERE.

Our Royalist contemporary, the British, says:

What if the United States should wake up some fine morning to the discovery that in the possession of actual interest in these Islands she stood only second in pre-eminence? As the latest attempt to rush the annexation of Hawaii has proved, or in all likelihood is about to prove, abortive, the question of securing the legitimate maintenance of supremacy among the Powers in relations with this group becomes a living and serious one for United States statesmanship. In this regard it is doubtful if a more effective and finer stroke could be made at the outset than the hurrying through of an American telegraph cable to the Hawaiian Islands from the Pacific coast of the United States.

There is a point in this which the United States would do well to consider and which the American Minister might profitably report upon. British capital has, within the last few years, been quietly adding to its investments on these Islands. It is represented in the ownership of several large plantations and wholesale houses, in that of the street car system and Honolulu iron works and in the million dollar British loan. But for the unsettled state of things it would now be employed in the Oahu railroad extension. Every year notes its fresh encroachment, and suggests that, at its recent rate of increase, British capital may yet become a preponderant factor in Island affairs. If that time arrives the United States will have deep reason to regret any delay that may befall the Annexation movement now and Great Britain will have abundant cause to be politically thankful for it.

THE new Vancouver line of steamships, connecting as it does with the Canadian Pacific, promises to be a boon to Hawaiian travelers to the World's Fair. The initiated globe-trotter lives in dread of a summer's journey from San Francisco to Chicago through the terrific heats of the desert which lies between the Sierras and Salt Lake, and at a time when the cars will be jammed with local pilgrims who have no other ready means of railway egress to the East. Much is to be dreaded, also, from the alkali water which is supplied en route for at least 1000 miles. Upon the Canadian Pacific, however, one's comfort is never interfered with. The air is always cool, bracing and resinous, the cars are not overrun with a swarming and sweating multitude, the scenery is that of wooded mountains and valleys rather than of sand and rocks, and the journey to Chicago—one's car switching to the great Vanderbilt lines within a short distance of that terminal—is a pilgrimage of delight. Introduced as all this is by a rapid northward flight from warm Hawaii in the sumptuous Warimoo or Miowera, what more could the health and pleasure-seeking tourist ask?

THE question of the steamship subsidy is one that ought to be settled in favor of the lines with the biggest, safest, speediest and most desirable vessels.

THE Fourth of July should be observed this year in a way to tell in favor of the Annexationist cause.

A TRIBUTE TO STEVENS.

What a Man from Maine Thinks of the Ex-Minister.

AUGUSTA (Me.), June 2.—The following has been received from Harold M. Sewall, ex-Consul-General at Samoa and a prominent Democrat:

"HONOLULU (via San Francisco), May 24th.—Hon. J. H. Munley, August 1st, Me.: Your distinguished fellow-townsmen leaves here to-day, bearing with him the thanks and good wishes of every American throughout the Pacific. Within the line of his duty it has been his fortune to do much to promote the American solution of what seems to-day to be the greatest of American questions. As a citizen of Maine I am proud of him, and I hope your State will give him the welcome he deserves."

HAROLD M. SEWALL.

The above is interesting in connection with ex-Minister Stevens' return to this country.

It is found difficult to carry out the Geary act with the means at hand and nothing will be done till after Congress meets and makes a larger appropriation.

DEATH OF EDWIN BOOTH.

Peaceful End of the Great Tragedian.

NEW YORK, June 7.—Edwin Booth, who has been hovering between life and death so many days, passed away at 1:15 o'clock this morning in his apartments in the Players' Club. The decline in his physical condition had been very perceptible for several days, and as long ago as Saturday night all hope of saving his life was given up.

All day yesterday his condition grew steadily worse, and at seven o'clock this evening Dr. St. Clair Smith was hastily summoned to the club. He said that the tragedian's pulse was in the neighborhood of 160 and his temperature over 105. There was nothing that could be done except for the anxious watchers to sit by the bedside until the feeble spark of life was finally extinguished.

At ten o'clock another serious change was noted, and Dr. Smith was again summoned. He did what he could to ease the dying moments of Mr. Booth, who, although completely unconscious, appeared to suffer greatly for lack of air, it being apparently extremely difficult for him to breathe.

From this time until he expired the great actor gradually grew weaker. The restless motions of the hands finally ceased, and life passed away.

The end was peaceful in the extreme. The wonderful vitality which so long had sustained the flame of life had flickered out almost imperceptibly. The end had come almost before those who were watching knew it. Grouped about the bedside were Mr. Booth's son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Ignatius Grossman, J. H. McGonigle, Superintendent of the Players' Club and a brother-in-law of Mr. Booth, William Bispham, a close personal friend of the Grossmans, and Charles H. Carrill, one of the Players' Club House Committee.

When death came Dr. St. Clair Smith was in attendance. After signing to those present that all was over he hurried down stairs, where a great crowd of the dead tragedian's friends were in waiting and gave to them the news. The doctor said: "There is nothing to say in description of Mr. Booth's death. It was like the passing of a shadow. His vitality had been surprising, and I was amazed that death had not come before. Everything pointed to the early death of Booth this morning. On April 17th his vitality, which had sustained him for seven weeks to such a surprising extent, then gave indications that it would not bear him up much longer."

When Dr. St. Clair Smith called at 8 o'clock he looked for the great actor's early demise. He left the house at 9 o'clock, when the attendants posted this bulletin, that he had then written: "There has been a change in Mr. Booth's condition since midnight. Mr. Booth has been unconscious since Sunday."

Mrs. Grossman called at the club early in the morning. She has been unremitting in her attendance at the bedside of her father, and her friends have all along feared that the strain would finally prove too much for her to bear. She is looking very ill, indeed, but her anxiety has not allowed her to absent herself from the sick chamber longer than was necessary to attend to her children and necessary household duties. Mr. Grossman also called several times and spent some time in the sick room. He took the children there on one occasion, but they remained only a short time and then went home with a maid.

Dr. Smith went away again late in the day and at 6:45 o'clock a messenger was summoned, who rushed out of the clubhouse for him. It was then thought Mr. Booth was sinking and would soon die. Dr. Smith drove up at 7:30 o'clock. Previous to this time there had been a report from the sick chamber that Mr. Booth's extremities were growing cold and that he could live but a short time.

The result of the doctor's examination was contained in this bulletin that he posted at twenty minutes to 8 o'clock: "Mr. Booth is gradually sinking and it is doubtful if he survive the night." Dr. Smith left the house shortly after. He seemed much affected. He had long been a personal friend of Mr. Booth, as well as his physician, and the actor's impending death weighed upon him very much. He was away from the club for a couple of hours, but returned at 10:30 o'clock after that he did not leave Mr. Booth's bedside until the tragedian had passed away.

BOTH PEACE ARMIES.

Nicaragua Troops Not to Disband Just Yet.

NEW YORK, June 6.—The Herald's correspondent at Managua cables that, although peace has been fully established under the protocol arranged by the peace commission has been installed, the army which fought for Sacasa and the one which was organized by the revolutionists have not yet been disbanded. Some portions of these armies will maintain their organizations until a permanent Government is established through a vote of the people.

Salvador Machado, who was selected by the peace commissioners to succeed Sacasa, was inaugurated amid great enthusiasm. Thousands of citizens filled the streets and cheered the members of the Cabinet appointed by the revolutionary Junta when they arrived at the capital from Granada. These cheers were repeated on the appearance of United States Minister Baker, who was instrumental in opening and conducting the negotiations through which peace was established.

Under the terms of the protocol by which the war was declared ended, the new Government will gradually disband the armies of the deposed Government and the revolutionists, but a portion of each army will maintain its organization until a permanent government has been established. The expenses of the war on each side will be recognized, and they will pair on equal terms to guard against trouble. Meanwhile, the Provisional Government, under President Machado, is rapidly pushing forward measures for the general good. All citizens have been assured that they will be undisturbed in the enjoyment of their political rights under the arrangement signed by the revolutionists and Sacasa's representatives. No member of the Provisional Government can be removed until a permanent government has been established by the constituent assembly. Neither of the parties of the late war can therefore take advantage of the other, and each will be represented in the Government until a constituent assembly, which is to be called within four months, prescribes the way in which a permanent government shall be established. When this is done an election will be held for President. It is not probable that any leader on either side in the late combat will be chosen President for the first constitutional term.

Perfect order prevails in all parts of Nicaragua. Ex-President Sacasa, accompanied by his wife, left for Leon before the new Government took office. It is believed that they will leave the country. The part taken by United States Minister Baker in restoring peace causes great satisfaction. Don Francisco Medina, ex-Minister to France, is also praised for the part he took in the negotiations for peace. The United States cruiser Alliance arrived at Corinto last Wednesday and is still at that port. The Bank of Nicaragua, which suspended during the war, has resumed operations, and general business is being rapidly pushed forward.

EULALIA IN CHICAGO.

The Princess Housed at the Palmer House.

CHICAGO, June 6.—The Spanish Princess arrived here at noon. She slept well, notwithstanding the fact that last night was her first experience of a night in an American sleeping-car. She rose refreshed and breakfasted well.

Thousands of people from every State in the Union and almost every country on the face of the earth were at the train, eager to see her and give her welcome to the truly democratic city. As she disembarked at Union depot, in Canal street, Mayor Harrison received her as one of Chicago's World's Fair guests and extended to her the hospitality of the city. Formality was minimized.

When presented to the Princess, Mayor Harrison, like a true Kentucky gentleman, kissed her hand, and in rapid succession others of the reception committee were presented, and then Prince Antonio, the husband of the Infanta, the Duke of Tananaris and the remainder of the suite followed, and handshakings became general. The Princess was then escorted by Mayor Harrison to her carriage, which was in waiting, and the remainder of the party were quickly seated in the respective conveyances. The procession started on a quick trot, escorted by two troops of United States cavalry, over the bridge and down town to the Palmer House. Here, as at the depot, was a large and enthusiastic crowd waiting, and the Princess was greeted with loud cheers. The portico of the hotel, as well as the rotunda, was gayly decorated with the Spanish and American colors. As the Princess entered the hotel she bowed smilingly to the vociferous crowd which extended for several hundred feet on both sides. Lines of yellow-plumed calvarymen gave them no chance to break in upon the entrance as they would have liked.

The committee on ceremonies at the World's Fair held a lengthy session to-day and arranged a lengthy program for the reception of the Infanta Thursday. She was to-day presented with a pass good for herself and suite to the Fair, handsomely engraved on gold plate, bearing the signatures of President Palmer of the World's Columbian Commission, H. N. Higginbotham, president of the World's Columbian Exposition, and Director-General George R. Davis. The weather to-day was beautiful and about 70,000 people visited the Fair.

BARON DE TUYLL'S DEATH.

A Very Sad Ending of a Tour Around the World.

A sad scene was enacted on the Pacific Mail dock yesterday morning on the arrival of the steamer Gaelic from the Orient via Honolulu. The Baroness de Tuyl had gone down to the steamer expecting to greet her husband, who had been visiting the Hawaiian Islands with a friend in search of health. When she learned that her husband had died at sea on the 1st inst, and that his body was on board she nearly fainted. Tears streamed down her face as she was helped to a carriage and driven to the Palace Hotel. Dr. Griffith, the friend of her deceased husband, accompanied the young widow and related to her all the incidents of the trip and death.

Baron de Tuyl, although holding a German title, was a native of England and 34 years of age. His health failing about six months ago, he started on a trip around the world, and shortly afterwards met Dr. Griffith, whose home is at Cairn, Ryan Lodge, Preston Park, England. The two became great friends and traveled together. At Hongkong the Baron cabled to England for his wife to meet him here, and so the news she received on the arrival of the steamer was particularly shocking. The young widow will take the remains to England.—Chronicle.

Trusts and Combinations Are unpopular. But there is one form of trust against which no one has anything to say. That is the trust which the public reposes in Hood's Sarsaparilla, and the best of it is that it is fully justified by the merit of the medicine. For, remember, HOOD'S Sarsaparilla CURES.

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable, and do not purge, pain or gripe. Sold by all druggists.
